Workshops:

These five workshops help members of the public and representatives of patients' groups get to grips with some of the most important aspects of research, including research methods, speaking to researchers with confidence and exploring different methods of community involvement in research.

The workshops are facilitated by Charlie Davison, Principal Investigator and fellow of the School of Health and Human Sciences at the University of Essex.

Lunch and refreshments will be provided. The workshops are free but participants will have to arrange their own transport. Participants are free to attend single workshops only or the complete series, but places must be reserved in advance.
