Public and Patient Involvement in Research

Strengthening Community Voices in Health Research: A series of five workshops

Now more than ever, healthcare research in Britain is looking for active and effective community involvement.

Developing stronger public and patient input to every stage of the research process has become a key goal of the NHS National Institute for Health Research (NIHR).

This series of five workshops is designed to help members of the public and representatives of patient's groups get to grips with some of the most important aspects of research.

Over the course of the workshops we hope to build the confidence and understanding of the attendees to enable them to:

- Understand research methods, terminology & outcomes
- Speak to researchers with confidence and take part in steering groups effectively
- Explore the different methods of community involvement in research.

Workshop 4 – Outcomes and Benefits

Wednesday 8th December 2010
10.30am – 2.30pm (lunch included)
Assembly House, Norwich, NR2 1RQ

Outcomes and Benefits looks at:

How you tell if a treatment or service is effective or not?
What are the advantages and disadvantages of different types of measurements
Asking "How and why does value for money come into research?"

Outcomes and Benefits aims to:

Provide knowledge of measurement styles and techniques
Demonstrate how "value of money" can be assessed using these measurements

The Facilitators:

Charlie Davison	Independent Healthcare Research and Training Consultant
Jacqueline Romero	Public & Patient Involvement in Research (PPIRes) Co-ordinator (Norfolk/Suffolk)

There is no cost, but attendees will have to arrange payment for transportation.
